2. Citations and explanations:

Claims 1-51 lack an inventive step under PCT Article 33(3) as being obvious over Shigeyuki, et. al. Shigeyuki, et. al. teach sustained release microcapsules (note paragraph 0008), including nanoparticles (note paragraph 0040), containing active agent. The nanoparticles may contain vitamin K2 (note paragraph 0085) and calcitonin (note paragraph 0048). The formulation may be in capsule or tablet form (note paragraph 0155) and may contain excipients such as surface stabilizers (e.g. gelatin - note paragraph 0117) and enhancers (note paragraph 0156). The formulation may be prepared by, inter alia, homogenization (note paragraph 0123). The formulation may be used to promote osteogenesis (note paragraph 0085). Shigeyuki, et. al. do not teach the specific particle sizes and weight percentages claimed, however these may be determined by routine experimentation. In view of these teachings, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to provide a nanoparticulate vitamin K2 composition for the treatment of osteoporosis, as taught by Shigeyuki, et. al.

Claims 1-51 meet the criteria set out in PCT Article 33(4), and thus have industrial applicability because the subject matter claimed can be made or used in industry.
